Things I know at 31, I wish I had known at 21:

You don't need a $50,000 degree.

The internet is full of hidden gems.

All you need is a dedication to learn.

There are YouTube videos & podcasts that are priceless.

You just need the true desire to find it.

...

Take notes.

The human brain is not designed to remember anything.

It's designed to forget & clear itself up.

Write down whatever you learn.

I personally use RoamResearch.

I can't tell you how much this habit has helped me.

Look at the big picture.

Don't be trapped by Small Game Syndrome.

If you're playing a Ranji & consider yourself the world's best player, my friend, you will end up nowhere.

Don't let small successes stop you from continuously bettering yourself.

Think from a broader.

People don't care about you.

They care about themselves.

Nobody cares about which brands you are wearing.

People are busy looking for good themselves.

They don't have time for you.

Be free.

Don't live for people's approval.

If you do so, you'll die from their rejections.

If you are searching for it externally, you are doing nothing but filling a pot, with a hole in the bottom.

From the inside out, construct it.

The biggest mistake I did was not networking early on.

Don't shy away from meeting new people.

Meet your competitors.

Doesn't matter in what industry you're in, network with your competitors & learn from them.

Dinesh Godara

@dineshgodara700

...

Learn from others.

The most destructive quality you can have is to be arrogant.

If you think you know everything, you'll never learn anything from anyone.

Find someone who has what you want.

Observe what they are doing, reach out to them, & don't hesitate to ask for help.

Learn to speak English.

Ik, I'm going to get a lot of hate here but still.

Doesn't matter in which country you're, learning English will open up more opportunities for you.

Most of the best resources are only available in English.

There would be times...

When you feel, you've lost.

You'll get stuck. You'll feel like it's the end.

Remember, that would be the time when everything would be started.

Your surrounding defines you.

Move to a good city.

I come from a small village & now I'm in BLR.

I can't explain how much it has impacted my life.

It matters a lot, don't underestimate it.
